

Cookie Policy

Effective 25 September 2026

This document explains how Luna Glamping Ltd. uses cookies and similar browser technologies on its websites, what is necessary for site features, how optional choices are handled, and how to change those choices.

What cookies do

A cookie is a small item of data a website can store in your browser. Related browser storage may also help keep a session, remember a choice, or protect a requested feature. The technologies in use can change as site features and providers change.

Necessary cookies and storage

Necessary technologies help deliver and secure features you request. They can maintain an authenticated Luna account or Luna Agent session, associate a guest 3D design with its owner, protect access to a private shared link, or complete a Google Calendar connection. They are used only when the relevant feature is used and are not controlled by the optional-cookie switches.

CookieYes also stores or reads your consent choice so the site can remember it and display the appropriate controls. You may be unable to use some site features if your browser blocks all necessary storage.

Optional categories

The Luna preference panel displays the optional categories available from CookieYes for this site. These may include Functional, Analytics, Performance, Advertising, and Other. A category is shown only when CookieYes supplies it. Analytics can help us understand site use; advertising can support more relevant messages. A category name does not mean every possible tool in that category is active.

Before you record a choice, Luna treats optional categories as disabled. The controls let you accept all optional categories, use only necessary cookies, or save a category-by-category selection. Optional services may require a matching consent choice before they are used.

Your choices and control

How CookieYes is used

Luna provides its own cookie notice and preference panel. CookieYes records the choice behind that interface and supplies the categories that the panel offers. Its own banner is not intended to appear as a second, separate choice. You can return to the Legal Documents page and use the separate Manage cookie preferences control below the document list to review or change your choice.

A change applies from the time it is saved. It does not necessarily erase data already stored by your browser or another provider. You can also clear or block cookies using your browser settings, although blocking necessary storage can interrupt account access or other requested features.

Third-party content and records

Some pages may contain embedded media or services from other providers. If you enable or use such content, that provider may process information under its own policy. The available categories and individual cookie names or lifetimes can change as services are added, removed, or updated. The current preference panel is the place to review the choices available on this site.

Updates and questions

We may update this policy when our site or the technologies it uses change. The date at the beginning of the document identifies this edition. For information about personal data more broadly, read the Privacy Policy in Legal Documents. For questions about this policy or your choice, contact sasha@lunaglamping.com.